SDSU gives Ofield an Oscar ... sort of Jack Ofield, an Emmy award-winning filmmaker who has produced scores of television programs, has received an Outstanding Faculty Award from the SDSU Alumni Association. Ofield is the School of Communication's filmmaker-in-residence, teaching advanced film production and graduate documentary production.

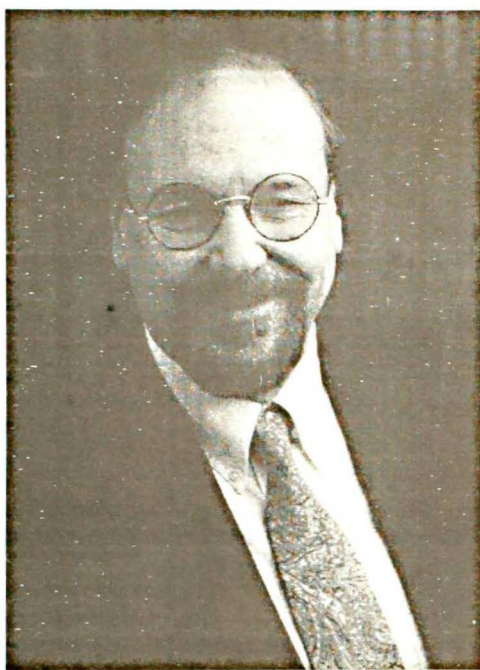

Ofield, a resident of Lemon Grove and husband of General Plan Advisory Committee Chair Helen Ofield, was selected as the 1996 faculty award recipient for SDSU's College of Professional Studies and Fine Arts. The award carries a prize of $500 and is given to those who have demonstrated outstanding teaching, work or contributions to the University and community. Eight other similar awards in differing academic areas were also given out this spring.

"He represents the finest qualities and spirit of the teacher-scholar-artist that are so highly valued in our faculty in the College of Professional Studies and Fine Arts," Dean Joyce Gattas said about Ofield, who has been at SDSU since 1989.

Ofield has earned an international reputation through his work as founding director of the SDSU Production Center for Documentary and Drama. He is the producer of more than 160 programs and series for PBS, ABC, CBS and education and cultural organizations nationwide. His work has won nine Emmy awards, along with other awards, for producing such films as "A Safe Place," "Balboa Park: The Magic City," and "Tolerance on Trial."

In April, Cox Cable (Channel 4) are Ofield's new pilot program entitled "Animal Encounters," a half-hour conservation series. In the pilot, viewers were introduced to the endangered Western Lowland Gorillas living in a specially-designed habitat at the San Diego Zoo, and the birthing of the great Grey Whales in Scammons Lagoon, Baja California.

"Animal Encounters" is generally intended to convey the central message that all species need each other to survive. Future programs will expand this theme in visits to natural and manmade animal habitats around the globe, with special emphasis on those in San Diego County and California.

Ofield also serves on a variety of film festival juries, arts panels and boards, and is a directing fellow of the American Film Institute and a member of the Directors Guild of America.

The winners of the SDSU Alumni Association awards are selected by a campus committee after being nominated by their colleagues. Although the awards are announced in May, the winners receive campus recognition each fall at the President's Convocation, the traditional beginning of the SDSU academic year.

Teens, cops cool to Clinton 8 o'clock curfew proposal

by Mark
Morgan-Hallburn

Ask a teenager at the mall about the latest proposal by the President of the United States and you're likely to get a blank stare. But when Bill Clinton proposed an 8 p.m. curfew recently, word hit the streets like wildfire, and teenagers in the East County had plenty to say.

"He's crazy," said Sheila Castro, 17, of Spring Valley, attends Monte Vista High. "By the time I finish school, softball practice, then my homework, it's eight o'clock. Then I'm allowed to go out. I have my act together, so I'm entitled to some fun."

Daniel Duggan, 19, of Ramona, echoed her sentiments.

"People think we hit the streets at three and don't come home until midnight. Not true," he said. "I had a 3.85 G.P.A. and played two sports in high school in L.A. There's a crime element, but punish those people, not everybody."

Steve Shenders of Lakeside, a 16-year-old who is working on his G.E.D., suggests the criminal element is in the White House.

"This proves Clinton is inhaling," he said. "He's got to be kidding. Just because he can't control Chelsea, he has to come after us? We aren't old enough to vote until during his last term. He won't be accountable to teens."

That's a chicken proposal, and he stole it from the Republicans."

Teenagers may be surprised to learn that local law enforcement might be on their side. Sgt. Terry March of the La Mesa Police Department said he thinks the 8 p.m. curfew is too early.

"I think 10 p.m. is fine," he said. "We have a 10 p.m. curfew here in La Mesa and it works."

Sgt. Jim Cunningham of the El Cajon Police Department said his city currently has an 11 p.m. curfew and it works. "I haven't had a chance to study the 8 p.m. idea yet," he said.

Educators are in favor of a curfew, as well as some students, though the eight o'clock idea isn't gaining much support.

Michael Lewis, Assistant Principal at Helix High School said a curfew is a positive thing.

"I'm not sure I agree with 8:00, because there's some school activities that wouldn't be over," he said. "The students would be allowed to attend those, but they would be hassled unnecessarily on the way home. I'm not sure what the perfect time would be."

Lewis said kids who study might not care, but the ones who don't will just find something else to do: like watch more television. An earlier curfew wouldn't hurt, but policymakers shouldn't think it will change someone's character, he said.

Darla Daniels, a 17-year-old freshman at Grossmont College, said students would be better off at home by 8 p.m. because there is too much pressure to party all the time.

"Being forced to be in early would have made it much easier in high school," she said. "My parents made me do homework in the afternoon and I could stay out until nine. Even then it was hard to get up in the morning. I had classmates sleeping through first period every day."

A 15-year-old sophomore Over at Granite Hills High School (who would only give his first name as "Joe") concurred.

"My friends would call me a traitor, but I think it's a great idea," he said. "We need to study. I can still party on the weekends. No one will stop me then."

Backcountry traffic up, supervisors declare border crisis

by Dave Schwab

County Supervisors this week declared a wildfire emergency along the U.S. - Mexico border, and petitioned the federal government for more law enforcement personnel and funding to build more access roads into the rugged region.

Abandoned campfires and carelessly disposed cigarettes by illegal immigrants are being blamed as the cause of the increasing number of border fires.

The emergency resolution was offered by East County Supervisor Dianne Jacob, who characterized the border region as a "war zone."

"The California Department of Forestry (CDF) has documented at least 2,600 illegal crossings in the East County border region daily," noted Jacob. "The number of fires along the East County border has increased significantly. In 1994, there were 24 fires. This year so far, with the fire season only just begun, there have been more than 200 fires that are directly related to the illegal alien traffic."

The price tag for battling the 201 back country blazes this year has been estimated at $2.9 million by the CDF.

The Border Patrol has strong evidence to believe, but no hard evidence to support, the claim that illegals are responsible for setting fires in rural East County border areas.

"Nobody can confirm that it's illegal aliens setting those fires," acknowledged Ron Henley, supervisory Border Patrol agent. "But we have a strong suspicion it's illegals because of the amount of traffic that goes through there."

"Drug traffickers with backpacks use the same (smuggling) corridors. It could be U.S. citizens. It could be anybody setting the fires."

The CDF, responsible for battling county wildfires, is convinced illegal alien activity is the root cause of the border fire problem.

"These areas are not for recreational campers, it's rough and really inaccessible," noted Gary Eidsmoe, CDF fire captain specialist. "Ninety-nine-point-nine percent of the time you can say accurately that it's illegal immigrants, whether it be abandoned campfires, arson, smoking or otherwise."

Another cause of the intensifying East County fire problem has been the eastward migration of illegal alien activity resulting from Operation Gatekeeper. That stepped-up border operation, designed to stem the tide of illegals into the United States along the 15 urban miles on the border's western side, is increasingly driving illegal traffic further east

The Border Patrol has complained of being unable to gain vehicular access to the border, or high points on overlooking ridge tops, due to stringent federal guidelines applying to federal Bureau of Land Management (BLM) lands. There are two large BLM-owned wilderness study areas along the U.S. - Mexico border — Southern Otay Mountain and Western Otay Mountain, occupying approximately 13,000 acres combined.

Jo Simpson, public affairs officer for the BLM's California Desert District based in Riverside, said there's a 4.5-mile gap in the

B Words

When in Lemon Grove, make lemonade

I was pleased to read the column by new Mayor Mary Sessom, "M is for Mayor." I believe that this is a good start and would hope to see more "M" words in the future. In fact, I would think that there should be "C" words, "S Words," "L Words," and now "J words" in the Review on a regular basis. We hear the words "involvement" and "communication" over and over again. What better way to do both than to put your thoughts and opinions out for all to see? For me it has been very helpful to get feedback from the populace when they find something to comment on in my "B Words" column. Agree or not, it is communication, and in so doing the public is getting involved.

The new council has gotten off to a fine start and I am confident that they will do well. It looks to me as if they have a number of big decisions to make in the near future, probably more than I was ever confronted with at any one time since 1977.

When we first contemplated the purchase of the church property, I don't think any of us expected the rush to decision that is confronting the Site Use Committee. An opportune time to buy, and subsequent shrewd purchase, has whetted everyone's appetite with the prospects of uses that would be an absolute boon to the community.

The Thren bequest for a library has literally inflamed the Friends of the Library, and rightly so. Now the trick is to how to most effectively use the money in the best possible way commensurate with the General Plan and the future needs of Lemon Grove. Much information needs to be forthcoming from all of the compass points that steer our little Ship of City.

Federal Boulevard has been too long given the shirt tail treatment in the budgetary process. Back on the farm, we used a different term which referred to the hind most mammary gland of a female pig. The funding which has been a seemingly impossible dream, just has to somehow be found to do the job. Our capable City manager is in the process of putting together a bonding mechanism that may well see the flooding cease at long last.

It is apparent now that the "Crime Bill" is not going to be of much help, if any, to small jurisdictions such as Lemon Grove. The strips that are attached, seem to me to make it a situation where, if we can afford to hire more cops on our own, a few paltry dollars will help get them on board. We do need more deputies in our town. We need more help for the Senior Patrol and the Neighborhood Watch programs. Crime prevention is certainly much cheaper than after-the-fact actions.

After 18 budgets, I can well appreciate the difficulty and agonizing that lies ahead in '96 and beyond. Placing urgent needs in a priority list means placing some above others, and there will always be some to go begging. I would hope that the people of Lemon Grove will appreciate and understand why this is necessary, and trust that prudent and honest judgement will make those decisions.

I know that my old idea of having public drinking fountains that bring up ice cold lemonade at the press of a button will not be a top priority, in '96, or maybe even better. But, maybe in the distant future? It's

Letter to the Editor

Hey, City Council!

All of the plans for the Lemon Grove of the future do not include a Transportation Center.

Such a center is badly needed and should be established immediately without waiting for the reconstruction in the area of Broadway and Lemon Grove Avenue.

The City Council, City Planner and City Engineer should take a short walk North on Main Street and observe the chaotic plight of the trolley and bus passengers as they attempt to make timely connections between the various transports.

It is pathetic to see people running across busy streets and intersections. If elderly or handicapped travelers take too long, they must wait for the next bus or trolley. That can be a long wait, sometimes in bad weather.

All the buses which are intended to connect with the trolley should be routed to a designated area so that they stop and wait very close to the trolley. Perhaps the empty lot on Main Street immediately west of the trolley station. Perhaps even an elevated walkway over Main Street, starting on a level with the trolley station may be considered to separate pedestrians and cars on Main Street.

Another possible location for all busses to wait is on the west side of Lemon Grove Avenue, just north of Broadway. From this point buses could go east or west on Broadway.

If the lot on Main Street is used to accommodate buses southbound on Main Street, which must go east on Broadway, eliminate the island on Broadway blocking Main Street crossing Broadway to the south. These buses could then turn east on Broadway. Perhaps a left-turn signal (east) would be necessary at this point. The traffic signals at Lemon Grove Avenue for Broadway to the east should be eliminated and reestablished on the West side of the intersection of Main Street and Broadway.

Well, enough said. I'm sure the City Planner and City Engineer can do a better job than me in planning the routing of a transportation center.

We work hard and we deserve it!

In response to Sherman H. Johnson's letter to the editor ["How long has this been going on?" May, 28 edition] as to why the Friends of the Library get so much space in the Lemon Grove Review, I answer as follows: Because we deserve it. There is an entire group of volunteers who put in hours upon hours arranging numerous activities for the library, including but not limited to, our bi-monthly book sale. This sale enables the Friends of the Library to donate a minimum of $500 every other month to the library for purchase of new materials and books for the Lemon Grove Library, and for your personal enjoyment. Show me one other group in Lemon Grove that does this on a regular basis. Just from Old Time Days alone we raised over $700 for the library. This I feel warrants us the page usage we have, and deservingly so.

U.S. - Mexico border fence now under construction where Southern Otay Mountain preserve abuts the border.

Simpson said it's the bureau's intention to be "flexible" in negotiating access by law enforcement authorities to border property it owns in San Diego County.

"There are no wilderness study area restrictions that would preclude us from doing everything possible to save human life," Simpson added. "We would work with them (federal authorities) to come up with a rational solution."

Proposed federal funding cuts are making border problems harder to solve, added Jacob.

"CDF funds are proposed to be cut," she said. "We're going to ask for restoration of those cuts, and also ask that any restrictions be waived to allow firefighters and Border Patrol agents access into BLM property that right now they're being denied access to."

Further compounding the border fire problem is San Diego's recent dry winter.

"We've gotten about half the amount of rain we're supposed to have," stated CDF's Eidsmoe. "It's been dry in the critical stage, because of the past drought in 1989-91, which created a dead fuel load that has been growing over the last couple years."

Jacob said her intention in having the state of emergency declared is to draw state and national attention to the border fire threat.

"It's time the Clinton Administration step up to the plate and put forth the necessary reinforcements — whatever it takes on the border to stop illegal alien and drug smuggling," Jacob said. "I want to prevent a major fire disaster from happening."

'Lemon lady' back for fight over auto safety

Lemon Grove had a flash of fame in 1982 when a feisty North Island teacher named Rosemary Shahan-Dunlap mounted enough pressure to pass California's landmark auto Lemon Law by picketing John Factor Volkswagen for several months.

Shahan (no Dunlap now) is now a lobbyist in Sacramento fighting for even greater protections for consumers. She hopes to the Legislature will approve a pending measure to update the original Lemon Law.

Since it was enacted in 1982, California's law has served as the model for similar measures enacted in all 50 states. The National Association of Attorneys General pronounced state lemon laws "the single most important advance in consumer protection of the last decade."

However, many states have passed newer versions that surpass California's. Now, 21 other states provide longer coverage, some for the entire length of the express warranty (sometimes 7 years or 70,000 miles). California's relatively short lemon "presumption" expires after only 1 year or 12,000 miles. Most states provide protection for small business owners and self-employed people who need their car or truck to make a living. Our law excludes them. Eleven other states allow only 1 or 2 failed repairs when vehicles have a serious safety defect. California allows 4.

Also, every other major auto market in the nation provides uniform arbitration programs to resolve auto lemon disputes, where the law is applied. Here, manufacturers like Mazda, Mercedes, Toyota, Mitsubishi, and Volvo sell over 300,000 new vehicles yearly, but fail to offer arbitration programs. Among companies that do offer arbitration, decision makers simply take the law "into account," which means that it is often ignored. Some companies also forbid consumers to speak at their own hearings.

SB2052, authored by Senator Charles Calderon (D-Whittier), is aimed at updating California's outmoded lemon law.

"California was once a leader in providing lemon law protection to residents, but has since fallen behind many other states in ensuring that automobile owners with defective vehicles are treated fairly. SB2052 would provide a long-overdue update to the state's existing lemon law," Calderon said. SB2052 recently passed in the state Senate, 23-12. It goes next to the Assembly Consumer Protection Committee, where Lemon Grove Assemblyman Steve Baldwin will vote on the measure.

SB2052 will expand the lemon law to cover small businesses and self-employed people who register up to 5 vehicles. Consumer groups say this is only fair, since they pay the same price, and also have to abide by the same warranty terms as people who buy vehicles for "personal, family or household" use. The bill would also extend the lemon "presumption" to 2 years, 24,000 miles; allow fewer failed repair attempts for unsafe vehicles; goad more auto companies into offer arbitration programs; and require the arbitration programs to apply the law and to allow consumers to speak and rebut opposing evidence.

SB2052 is supported by a long list of small businesses and consumer groups including Consumers for Auto Reliability and

Safety. Consumer Action, CALPIRG, Consumers Union and the Center for Auto Safety. It is also supported by the California Tow Trucking Association, the California Automobile Association, and individual consumers. It is opposed by auto manufacturers such as General Motors and Ford Motor Company, as well as the American Automobile Manufacturers Association and the Association of International Auto Manufacturers.

Commentary

by Greg Eichelberger

I'm not ashamed to admit the fact that I, like an ever-increasing number of Americans, am overweight. At six-foot-five and 280 pounds, that's probably the understatement of the decade. I am also not about to start blaming my parents, my genes or society for this condition, either. The fact is, too much food and too little exercise has put me, and millions of others, in this position.

That being said, however, I am also not about to lay down and die because I do not fit the "average" weight standards set down by our omnipresent, benevolent U.S. Government. I may not be able to run a six-minute mile, but I can haul and lift material with the best of them. I can also carry my kids and others in the neighborhood around with one arm, lifting them to the top of a local Coke machine (don't ask) with little effort. In addition, my mental capacity has not suffered from my eating habits, though some may disagree. And the last check-up I had, both my blood pressure and cholesterol levels were below what a person half my weight would have been. Therefore, my life is not coming to an end because I don't have a perfect body.

Recent reports indicate that more and more Americans are at least 20 pounds overweight, and that number is continuing to rise. Many factors are responsible, but a sedentary lifestyle in which everything has become a bit too easy, working from the home, television remote controls, pizza delivery in 30 minutes or less, etc., is partly to blame.

I have some other ideas, too. Remember those commercials in the late 1980s, "... this is your brain on drugs ..."? I think those ads actually pushed kids toward narcotics, just so they could rebel against them. It seems logical then that all of these Jenny Craig, Richard Simmons, Family Fitness Center, Slim-Fast, Health-Rider and Nordic Track advertisements are having the opposite effect on much of the populace.

Now, of course, as a man who's both tall and fat (a phrase picked up from Rodney Dangerfield's "Back To School"), others do not comment on my "non-conformity." In fact, many of my friends are hefty individuals, too. And, if I'm not mistaken, being large is a prerequisite to join both the Lakeside Optimists and the Lions Clubs. Those beer-bellies which appear at the Chili Cookoff didn't come out of nowhere. They were carefully nurtured and cultivated over a period of years.

Of course, once in a while some yahoo will say something behind my back, but will never stay around to repeat it to my face. I don't care. I've never believed in censoring free speech, no matter how stupid it may be.

It is large people that have been that way for most of their lives that I feel sorry for, especially women. As a big guy, I can take care of myself, and am mostly unemotional enough to let comments roll off my back. Plus, I've only been this way for about six years, that being the amount of time it took for my bad habit to have caught up with me. Many who have been in this position for years are acutely aware of the stings of cruelty and rejection perpetrated upon them by an unfeeling and unthinking population. Even today, it is more than fair game to make fun of fat people. Stereotyped as clumsy, stupid or vapid, drunken party animals (thank YOU, Chris Farley), we are easy targets for those with low self-esteem to look down on. "Hey, I have no education and no marketable job skills, but at least I'm not fat." That's the kind of logic only a self-inflated, hedonistic, one-dimensional moron could love.

Now, I'm no angel myself. Much to my eternal dismay, I participated in making fun of the chubby girl who sat in front of me in freshman math class back at Lutheran High School North. Other kids and adults were targets, too. People whose only offense was to be fat. Not to have hurt or threatened me in any way, just to have committed the horrible sin of being overweight. It was juvenile and stupid of me. I know that now.

Fat Like Me

But the point of this essay is not to cleanse my soul of past sins, or to insult those who would insult me, but to let those out there who may have a weight problem know that it's not the end of the world. They are not likely to collapse this very minute. You are as happy or as healthy as you choose to be. There are certain elementary steps to take to improve any condition. I suggest taking things one day at a time and ignoring what the government says you ought to look and feel like. The government hasn't been right about anything yet, so why trust them now?

The fact is, one day I am going to die. Whether it's because of my heart, or something else — I will shuffle off of this mortal coil, and there is nothing I can do about it. Fat, skinny, pudgy or perfect, our bodies one day will cease to function, so why torture ourselves during the little time we have left? I know one thing, I've already lived longer than the Russian Olympic skater who succumbed to heart failure several months ago. A well-conditioned athlete with little or no body fat to speak of.

If only fat people had heart attacks, then I'd be singing a different tune, but, as the Great Gildersleeve said, "It's just ain't so, McGee."

Now, I'm not, in any way, encouraging people to go out and inhale taco chips, sub sandwiches and barbecued ribs like there's no tomorrow. Moderation is sufficient in most endeavors, but one should not become a slave to Vogue magazine's conception of the "perfect body," either.

My advice to parents with overweight kids is to help them, not criticize or preach to them. They get enough of that and worse from classmates. And classmates haven't invested love and caring into them like mom and dad are supposed to. To older fat people, live and let live. Ignore stupid remarks from ignorant people.

Enjoy life before the elevator door closes for the last time. It's too short to spend it worrying if other people like the look of your face or body. No one has everything anyway, so let's just be happy with where we are. If you want to change, do it. If not, I can live with that.

Reel Thoughts

'The Phantom' more than a purple daze

by Greg Eichelberger

After viewing the new Paramount Pictures release, "The Phantom," I wasn't really sure how to judge it until I overheard a teenager say, "That was the most boring movie I've ever seen."

As the stepfather of a few teens myself, I logically concluded that if one of them actually likes a film, I probably won't — I surmised that "The Phantom," directed by Simon Wincer, was an okay film in my book.

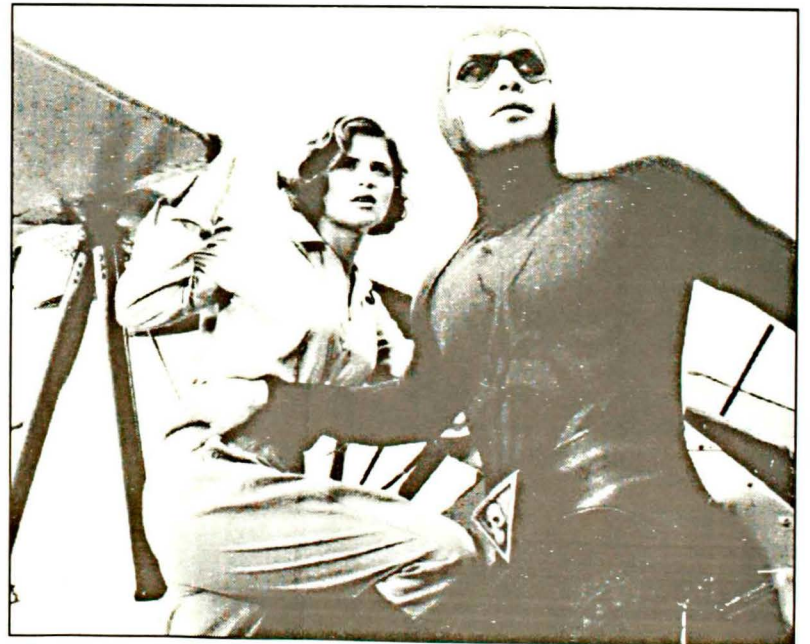

Based on the King Features comic strip from the '30s, "The Phantom" was the first superhero, three years before Superman and five years before Batman.

The story line goes like this: 400 years ago, a small boy witnesses his father's murder at the hands of ruthless South Sea pirates. Washed up on an island, the youth is befriended by local tribesmen and as he grows, vows to fight evil, passing down that pledge from generation to generation until we arrive at the movie's present time of 1938.

Borrowing heavily from the Indiana Jones trilogy (the screenplay was penned by "Last Crusade" alum, Jeffrey Boam), the forces of evil slice through the jungle in search of one of three "Skulls of Touganda," which have supernatural powers.

Our hero, Kit Walker, played by Billy Zane ("Orlando," "Sniper"), senses trouble and slips into his purple suit, jumps on his white horse, summons his wolf-dog pet and hastens to stop the evil-doers.

Enter Xander Drax, a rich, suave industrialist, wonderfully played by Treat Williams ("Mulholland Falls"), who wants to become world dictator.

Along the way we meet Diana Palmer (Kristy Swanson), as the free-spirited heiress and, later, Walker's love interest; the evil, exotic beauty Sada (Catherine Zeta Jones) and the Phantom's father, Patrick McGoochan (best known for his TV roles "Secret Agent" and "The Prisoner.")

The film was shot mostly in Thailand and on its surrounding islands. The lush tropical forests and clear azure water are captured beautifully by cinematographer David Burr. But while the photography is pleasing to the eye, the editing is awkward and jarring at times.

The special effects folks get a workout as the Phantom swings from flimsy ropes, slides down elevator cables, jumps on a horse from a low-flying biplane and manages escape after escape.

"The Phantom" was a pleasant enough diversion with some well-timed derring-do and more than enough sparkling witticisms, mostly provided by Xander Drax and McGoochan.

Without a big name to go on the marquee, though, it is difficult to see this film achieving blockbuster status. And that's a shame because, despite what the exiting teenager said, this movie deserves a better fate.

PG Perspectives

A virtual home

I'm a part of a serious national problem: the growing population of the homeless. Don't get me wrong, though. I've got a roof over my head and a floor under my feet. What I don't have is a "site." A "site" as on the "Web." That makes me homeless in the rapidly growing community of the world-wide web: a community, I'm told, that will be all-encompassing by the turn of the century. Woe is me.

To pull myself out of this dreadful situation (up by my boot straps so to speak), I have to do something now. The longer I'm out here, on the street as it were, the harder it's going to be to find a place.

I need to find a site. But, how do I go about getting one? And what kind of site? I've heard they come in various sizes and shapes. A room, a studio or something called a "page." Maybe I could survive on a page, if I knew what one was. I'm guessing that a room is bigger than a studio, but I'm not sure about that either.

I'm not looking for anything too pretentious. Just a simple little abode that will remove me from the ranks of the homeless. Nothing too big. And a neighborhood that is safe. I don't want to have to worry about viruses, invasions or fires (I think they call it "flaming"). I'd like it to have easy access to the information superhighway, too. That's what I think I want. Now, how do I go about getting it?

I guess the first thing I need to do is find someone who can help me. Perhaps, I should go to my cyberspace mentor, Mr. Fedder. If anyone knows about sites, it's Mr. Fedder. I'm sure he'll help me get a site on the web. Mr. Fedder always helps people like me.

Mr. Fedder scowled down at me from his high station. "What's this nonsense about M wanting a site on the web? Better Jed Clampett marry the bank lady."

"But, Mr. Fedder, I have something to say. 'Help! I'm homeless.' I need a site. Please, please, please."

"Sorry. We can't allow just anyone onto the web. Imagine what that would be like. You see my dilemma, don't you?"

"Mr. Fedder! I'm desperate. Please help me. I'm begging. I don't want to be homeless anymore. Please, please, please."

"All right, all right. Get off your knees. I'll help you get a site. But you must promise me not to let anyone know that I've helped you. My reputation is at stake here. Promise?"

"Yes, Mr. Fedder. I promise. Thank you. Thank you."

"It's too dangerous to try to do this in broad daylight. You'll have to come back when it's dark and we'll see if we can find you a place and move you in before anyone complains. I'll try to set it up. I'll call you when it's ready."

Stay tuned as Mr. Fedder tries to find me a web site. Until then, I'll continue to be homeless or, more accurately, "siteless."

Retrofit program reduces smog in old cars

A unique program designed to retrofit 1975-81 vehicles that fail smog check with a new technology upgrade kit that reduces smog-forming emissions by 60 percent is now underway.

The kit consists of an exhaust manifold feedback computer to control the air/fuel mixture and a three-way catalytic converter. The kit was developed by Neutronics Enterprises of Rancho Bernardo, contractor for the project, and is funded by the Air Pollution Control Board.

A total of 1,350 cars will be modified reducing mobile source emissions in the region by more than 57 tons over the next three years.

"This retrofit program provides the first real alternative for older cars that fail smog checks to be upgraded to reduce air pollution," said Supervisor Ron Roberts, chairman of the San Diego Air Pollution Control Board.

The cost per pound of emissions reduced is $4.50 - $5.50. The cost of the smog check program is $6 - $7 per pound of emissions reduced.

The retrofit involves replacing the old two-way catalytic converter with a new three way unit that also reduces nitrogen dioxide (NOx) emissions that contribute to smog formation. Three-way catalytic units were not required on cars until 1982.

A computer is also added to maintain an ideal exhaust gas mixture so the catalytic converter operates efficiently.

The value of the retrofit is $500. The cost of the kit will be paid by the Air Pollution Control District from the vehicle registration fund. Car owners may be required to spend up to $150 in tune-up and repair costs to qualify for the upgrade kit.

Since the new catalytic converters will fail if the car is unable to achieve complete combustion, the vehicle must first undergo a mechanical inspection to determine if it can be retrofitted. Examples of mechanical problems that need to be fixed include bad rings, bent or burnt valves and ignition systems that misfire.

Persons whose 1975-81 cars and light duty trucks have failed smog check and are interested in an upgrade should call 674-2252 for information on locations authorized to do retrofits.

Cars that fail smog check are not eligible for the Air District's old vehicle buyback and crushing program but could be eligible for this program.

A pilot project funded by the district two years ago involved 13 cars in a rigorous protocol test that resulted in the upgrade kits receiving California Air Resources Board certification and Bureau of Automotive Repair approval.

Motor vehicles account for 60 percent of smog-forming emissions in San Diego County.

Recent studies indicate that older, more-polluting vehicles account for about half of all motor vehicle emissions.

The $617,500 retrofit program is one of ten local projects to receive a grant from the District's vehicle registration fund.

Recycling awards program begins

California businesses and non-profit organizations putting forth their best efforts to reduce waste and recycle on the job are encouraged to apply for the 1996 Waste Reduction Awards Program (WRAP), sponsored by the California Integrated Waste Management Board.

"It gives us great pleasure to honor the many innovative measures companies and nonprofits are taking statewide to reduce, reuse, recycle and buy recycled," Waste Board Chairman Daniel G. Pennington said, announcing the opening of the 1996 WRAP application period.

"Waste reduction activities aren't just good for the environment, they're critical to California reaching its mandate to cut the state's waste by 50 percent as of the year 2000, and provide a substantial bottom-line benefit, saving businesses and organizations hundreds, even thousands, of dollars," he said.

California businesses and non-profit organizations that have taken effective steps to reduce the amount of nonhazardous waste they send to landfills are eligible to apply for the 1996 Waste Reduction Awards Program. However, companies in the business of recycling or reducing waste that is generated by others are only eligible to apply for recognition based upon their efforts to reduce their own waste.

Government agencies and schools are not eligible for the awards program.

Deadline to apply is July 31, 1996. To receive an application, call the Local Government Commission at (916) 448-1198, or download the application from the Waste Board's Web site at <http://www.ciwm.ca.gov> (see Business and industry section).

Now, in its fourth year, the WRAP awards evaluate how well applicants reduce, reuse and recycle their waste. Also considered are: efforts to buy recycled-content products; reduction of packaging waste; and educating employees about reducing waste.

All winners receive an award from the Integrated Waste Management Board and camera-ready logo art suitable for use in advertising and on products or educational materials to demonstrate State recognition of the company's efforts.
